"AGRIC" INTERESTS WIN VICTORY WHEN BILLS ARE PASSED

Assembly Concurs That License Should Be Placed on Butter and Cheese—Favor Consolidation Amendments.

(By Associated Press.) Madison, July 15.—The agricultural interests received consideration by the assembly today when it passed the bill providing for the licensing of all butter and cheese-makers in the state and concurred in the senate amendments to the agriculture consolidation bill, creating an agricultural commission of one member with auxiliary boards to manage the state fair and livestock sanitary agencies. By the creation of the agriculture department several independent boards heretofore existing are consolidated.

After going into committee of the whole on the county board of education bill, which sought to be repealed the senate refused, 14 to 8, to call Professor E. Palzer, chairman of the legislative committee and former president of the Wisconsin Teachers' association, whose views were desired by Senator Jennings.

The assembly refused to pass over the governor's veto the Caldwell bill curtailing straying of dogs in country districts.

The senate, over a protest by Senator Bennett received a new bill by Senator Bichler abolishing the office of state claim agent.

An assembly proposal asking for the dismissal of educators connected with the board of public affairs was taken up in the senate. The bill was turned down in the senate.

With a view to expediting the session, Senators Arnold, Bichler and committee appointed as a committee to sit with an assembly committee to consider the state of business in the legislature and to fix a date for final adjournment.

ARE BEHIND GERMANY IN U. S. CRISIS

NEW DRIVE AT WARSAW

Germans Are Preparing for Concentrated Movement in the East—French Claim Gains in Argonne.

(By Associated Press.) London, July 15.—A dispatch from Berlin by way of Amsterdam to the Exchange Telegraph company says: "The Austro-Hungarian protest to America is a sequel to the recent conference at Vienna between Dr. von Bethmann-Holweg, the German imperial chancellor, and Gottlieb von Jagow, the German foreign minister, and Baron Stepan von Ruziczka, the Austro-Hungarian foreign minister."

The protest was sent at the request of Germany and Turkey to follow suit.

The object is to warn America that a rupture of relations with Germany will mean also a rupture with Germany's allies.

Report Allies' Advance.

From Athens comes a report of a substantial advance by the Anglo-French forces against the Kritika-Achi-Baba line, but since so many wild rumors have originated in the German camp, this is received with reserve until officially confirmed.

The latest Paris communication counters the claim of German success in the Argonne region with the report that the French have set foot in several points in the German trenches of the road to Marie Theresen and that the French are making progress in their attacks beyond the Servon road to the west of the forest of Argonne.

New Drive On Warsaw.

All these signs point to a new German drive towards Warsaw from the east. Prussian frontier, but it is believed by military observers here that the Russians have sufficient forces in this direction to oppose formidable resistance.

It is expected the period of quiescence in Southern Poland will be ended by an attack from the Austro-Germans toward the river Bug. Great Britain again is experiencing domestic troubles with 150,000 coal miners on strike.

Austria Issues Red Book.

Berlin (by wireless to Sayville), July 15.—Among the news items prepared by the Overseas News Agency today for transmission abroad by wireless telegraphy was the following:

"The Austro-Hungarian government has published a red book dealing with the preparedness of Italy for war. It shows that the Italian government received incorrect information from its diplomats who underestimated the unpreparedness of Austria. The documents have to do with the years 1903 and 1911 and prove that the alleged violation of the Triple Alliance was approved by Italy."

POWER IN REMOVING BANK COMMISSIONER LEFT WITH SENATE

Assembly Last Night Kills Party Measure to Give Governor Power to Remove Commissioner of Banks.

(By Associated Press.) Madison, Wis., July 15.—The assembly last night killed the administration measure to give the governor power to remove the commissioner of banking for cause. At the present time this power is lodged with the senate. The bill was engrossed, but on final passage received only 45 votes. It requires 67 votes to pass a banking measure. The bill was opposed by Assemblymen Bradley, Laursen, Ostlie and Minkley. Assemblyman Everett made the principal argument in favor of the measure.

"You ask why the governor should be given this power," declared Assemblyman E. A. Everett. "We have an example in the bank at Racine that might give good cause for the removal of a commissioner. By what reason was this bank so neglected that a crash of this kind came?"

The assembly passed the Burke resolution abolishing the death of the late Henry H. Hagedorn at Green Bay. It engrossed a bill amending the present Blue Sky law so that the railroad commission will not give approval to securities, but will have all of the information on hand as to the character of the companies that propose to sell stocks and bonds. This change was made according to Assemblyman Hagedorn, because a milk company at Hillsboro had used the approval of the railroad commission to sell its stock, "fleeing innocent people out of many thousands of dollars."

There was no opposition to the passage of a bill to pay the members of the state athletic commission $5 a day for services performed, nor to a bill increasing the jurisdiction of the district court of Milwaukee county.

Without a roll call the assembly passed the bill to abolish the office of inspection of mining oils. This measure was advanced in the assembly two months ago by a large vote, but was defeated after the committee on finance submitted an unfavorable report. The Hambrecht bill to reduce the taxes of life insurance companies was postponed. Two substitutes were introduced. One by Hambrecht leaves the 3 percent tax, but makes exemptions to companies 70 percent of whose assets are in a first-class mortgage. The Laursen bill would increase the rate of taxation on income from investments from 3 to 4 percent.

By a vote of 25 to 10 after nearly two hours of debate, the assembly advanced the bill repealing the gross negligence law as applied to railroads.

DISMISSES CHARGES AGAINST HUNTSMAN

Sensational Murder Case at Bedford, Iowa, Comes Suddenly to End at Preliminary Trial.

(By Associated Press.) Bedford, Ia., July 15.—The case against Bates Huntsman, who has been on preliminary trial before Justice M. A. Sawyer for the alleged murder of Nathaniel Smith, a Missouri cattle man, and his son, in September, 1877, was dismissed today by Justice Sawyer.

The case was dismissed upon the motion of the attorneys for Huntsman, shortly before noon. Attorney General Cowson acquiesced in the motion, stating to the court that the refusal to admit the evidence of John J. Derickson, with reference to "Doc" A. L. Holliday, the hermit druggist, who is said to have been a participant in the alleged crime, had made it impossible for the state to proceed further.

LACK SALT TO CURE BIG CATCH OF FISH

Unusual Haul of Cod at Newfoundland May Go to Waste Because of Shortage of Salt.

(By Associated Press.) St. John, Newfoundland, July 15.—A scarcity of salt threatens to waste a large extent the benefit to be derived by Newfoundland fishermen from the unusually large catch of cod along the northern and eastern coast and along the Grand Banks this summer. Because of the small catch during the past two or three years the importers this season reduced their orders for salt, which comes from Tripoli, Sicily and Cadiz, Spain. In addition the war has caused delays to steamers bringing the salt.

Practically all the salt in the island has now been distributed to the fishing ports. Although at least 15,000 tons additional is expected to reach this city during the next month, it will arrive too late to save a large amount of cod which is rapidly piling up in the ports.

BOMB KILLS MEXICO CITY PASSENGERS

TRAIN FROM COAST TO CAPITAL IS WRECKED WITH LOSS OF MANY LIVES.

FACE MONEY SHORTAGE

With Siege Raised at Mexico City and With Food on Hand for Starving, Funds Available Prove Worthless.

(By Associated Press.) Washington, July 15.—A train between Vera Cruz and Mexico City has been wrecked by a bomb near Apizaco. The explosion killed and wounded many persons. A cablegram from Vera Cruz to the state department says it is uncertain whether the train left Vera Cruz July 12 or 13. The railroad has discontinued selling tickets to Mexico City.

Face Money Famine. Mexico City, freed from the peril of siege, and with prospects of food for the starving now is confronted with another famine—a scarcity of money. Millions of currency issued by the various factions in control of the capital, passed back and forth between them during the last year, have been repudiated by each succeeding government.

Although supported by a decree while the issuing faction remained in control, all such currency now in the hands of the populace is of doubtful value. Wildly issued large amounts, as did Zapata and when Obregon first occupied the city for Gen. Carranza made a large issue. Now that food and money are scarce, the currency, although possessed of some kind of value, may be unable to buy it. Officials here have been expecting the Carranza government will regulate the situation.

Quiet at Capital. Travelers arriving yesterday at Vera Cruz, reported Mexico City quiet and free from any kind of molestation. The population seemed indifferent to the shifting scenes of government.

Aylward, United States district attorney, who is here on court business. Mr. Aylward was informed today that Goldberg has been transferred to the western Wisconsin district for trial. Goldberg is said to be a member of the Chicago-Superior-Peoria gang charged by the federal authorities with supplying segregated districts at Superior and Peoria with "white slaves" from Chicago. Louis Goldberg and his brother Joseph were arrested at Chicago recently after being indicted by the federal grand jury at Eau Claire.

REFORMS IN STATE PRINTING IS SURE OF SENATE'S VOTE

State Printing Bill Advanced by Administration Referred After Vote to Finance Committee.

(By Associated Press.) Madison, Wis., July 15.—The state printing bill advanced by the administration to reorganize that body by making it consist of the governor, superintendent of public property and a state editor, is sure of enactment, the senate having ordered it to third reading yesterday afternoon by a vote of 22 to 4. The dissenters were Senators Arnold, Culbertson, Perry and Skogmo. The bill was then referred to the finance committee.

The incorporation of two amendments, offered respectively by Senators Bosshard and Everett, made the bill acceptable to the progressive minority that with three exceptions they voted for the bill. Senator Bosshard provides that the findings in any material to be printed in state documents, and Senator Everett's provided that bids for state printing shall be advertised in even numbered years, beginning January, 1916, for six successive weeks in six newspapers, each published in a different city.

The senate by a vote of 14 to 12 rejected the Culbertson substitute bill, making the board consist of the secretary of state, state treasurer, attorney general, superintendent of public property and a practical printer.

Senator Bray thought the state could make a substantial saving by cutting down the number of papers in which bids for printing are published. The senate refused to change this clause, however.

The senate concurred in assembly amendments to the conservation consolidation bill, making the act effective Aug. 1, and providing that not more than two of the three members of the conservation board shall belong to the same political party. The bill now goes to the governor.

The joint finance committee reported for indefinite postponement the Bennett bill for a one-man tax commission, and non-concurrence in the central board of education bill, now amended to embody the Staudenmayer substitute for a fiscal board for all state-supported educational institutions.

Senator Hanson offered in a spirit of levity, a joint resolution as an echo of the fight on the public welfare bill. It provided that the members and subordinates of the state board of health be excused further from attending sessions of the legislature, "their labors having been accomplished." It was allowed to die a natural death.

Pratt, chief of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, in a speech before the West Virginia Bankers' association convention here today. ## BRYAN MADE TROUBLE.

The Evening Wisconsin has something to say about the foreign situation brought about by ill-advised words of former Secretary of State Bryan. In discussing the situation it says:

"While Ambassador Gerard was at the Berlin foreign office in good faith employing the best of his ability to convince the government of the Kaiser that the government of the United States was in earnest in its insistence on respect for the limitations which international law imposes upon the use of submarine warfare, his language failed to make the impression on which he had calculated. The reason was revealed when the Germans bluntly informed him that he was bluffing, and that it was well understood in Germany that the American note was written merely for home consumption and all the administrative machinery of President Wilson required from Germany was a soft answer."

"Ambassador Gerard is a serious-minded man. He could not conceive the American government guilty of duplicity, and he knew what his instructions had been and how faithfully he had lived up to them. He reported back to Washington the tenor of what had been told to him in Berlin, and this brought on the revelation of Secretary Bryan's indiscreet confab with Ambassador Dumbra. "The trouble originated in Mr. Bryan's incapacity to understand international diplomacy. He talked to the Austrian representative like a snuff politician, and not at all like the secretary of state of the United States."

PROHIBITION AGAIN.
Another problem which is disturbing the peace of mind of the administration is that of prohibition. Democratic politicians seriously fear the passage of both houses of congress of a drastic prohibition law for the District of Columbia. Should such a measure be passed it would put the president in a serious dilemma. To approve it would be to forfeit that support of the liquor interests which is so valuable, especially in a pecuniary way, to the democratic party. To disapprove it would be to forfeit the support of the church people and the prohibitionists throughout the land. The Anti-Saloon League has pledged itself to raise $5,000,000 to support the presidential candidate who runs on a prohibition platform, regardless of whether he is a democrat or a republican. If the organization can carry its pledge into effect it will mean a tremendous advantage for the candidate which wins its support. And in this connection the stand of William J. Bryan for prohibition is recalled by the White House with serious misgivings. Of course all the influence which his friends can exert will be used to prevent congress from passing this problem to the President. But will that influence prove potent?

HUERTAS FOLLY.
The simplicity of Victoriano Huerta in assuming that he would be treated by this administration with the same leniency as has been shown to Villa and Carranza is regarded as indicative of extreme guilelessness on the part of the ex-president of Mexico. It is true that this administration has lent every possible encouragement to both Villa and Carranza, permitting the maintenance of their juntas in Washington and New York and allowing them to raise funds to carry on their respective revolutions. But neither Carranza nor Villa had committed the unpardonable sin, the refusal to obey the edict of Woodrow Wilson. Early in his administration, President Wilson decreed that President Huerta must abdicate the presidency and leave Mexico. To accomplish this end the President caused the landing of American troops at Vera Cruz on the pretext of procuring a salute to the flag. Huerta was finally forced out—with terrible consequences to the Mexican people. It is true, but in obedience to the mandate of Mr. Wilson. And it was the height of folly for ex-President Huerta to imagine that Mr. Wilson would tolerate his return to Mexico now.

THE AUTOMOBILE TAX.
As a result of the Cunningham bill Rock county will receive in the neighborhood of twelve thousand dollars to be expended on its rural roads from the state tax imposed on automobiles. The senator from Rock and Walworth counties has fought this bill in and out of committee, after committee, and through the various stages of legislation, winning his final victory on Wednesday in the senate when the measure was passed. Walworth county's share will be approximately nine thousand dollars. The persistence with which Senator Cunningham has fought what he believed the best interests of his constituents during the entire session, particularly during this measure, and also in support of the administration program for the reduction of taxation, shows that he has his best interests at heart, and he is to be congratulated on the position he has taken.

While the big leagues appear to be suffering from a lack of interest in the national game, the golf links are crowded daily with enthusiasts in a sport in which everyone can take an active part.

This is the time of year that the columns of the papers are filled with auto accidents and other fatalities. Drivers do not seem to learn a lesson of caution by the experience of others nor do fathers or the man handling the gun or rocking the boat.

Sit fast until President Wilson has fully digested that second note from Germany and digested its contents. Then pass judgment. Meanwhile we are a long way from hostilities and we do not want to get any nearer it if it is possible.

MAY AMEND STATUTE ON RECALL ELECTIONS

Senate Committee Would Have Special and Not General Charge Made Against City Officials.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE)

Madison, Wis., July 15.—In the belief that too much leeway is given for the recall of public officials in commission governed cities, the senate committee on corporations has offered an amendment to a bill amending the recall law. The amendment requires petitions for a recall to be specific rather than general. The original bill requires that the petitions be filed with the county judge instead of the city clerk and that the names of signers who are qualified voters at the time of signing the petition shall be counted whether such names appear on the registry list or not. With the amendment the bill is recommended for concurrence.

The same committee reported for non-concurrence an assembly bill providing that bids for advertising and publication of proceedings in cities in the second and third class, and in special charter cities, having between 10,000 and 50,000 population, shall be invited from all newspapers published regularly at least once a week in such city.

With an amendment the Skogmo bill abolishing the board of public affairs and creating a state council composed of the elective state officers and heads of commissions is recommended for passage by the senate committee. The amendment grants an appropriation of $20,000 annually.

The judiciary committee of the senate recommended for non-concurrence the employment of investigators by boards, commissions or institutions which they have investigated, and requesting the dismissal of such investigators. Senator Huber dissented. Concurrence was recommended for a bill providing a system for absent voting.

Lieutenant-Commander Wedgwood, in charge of a squadron of armed motor cars on a transport, removed the maxims and placed them with 2,300 men on an innocent looking vessel that was calmly beached at Gallipoli. When it ran aground, great doors were opened in its sides and a landing made after desperate resistance from the Turks.

The Search for Beauty.

Utilizing the face mask as a means of beautifying the complexion has been in vogue for many years. Henry III of France was vain enough to affect it in order to keep his skin fair. The face mask, again, was a part of the beauty treatment that Marguerite de Valois followed, and the celebrated Roman Empress Poppaea was another of its votaries. It was smeared inside with a beauty-giving cream and worn at night. Not every woman, however, cares to sleep in a mask.

When you have married a wife, you would think you were got upon a bill-top, and might begin to go down by an easy slope. But you have only ended courting to begin marriage. Falling in love and winning love are often difficult tasks to overbearing and rebellious spirits; but to keep in love is also a business of some importance, to which a man and wife must bring kindness and good will.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Deaths From Cancer.

There is absolutely no reason why we should not face the cancer mystery without either apprehension or panic. And there is no valid evidence that it is increasing.

LAST RESPECTS PAID TO PLINY NORCROSS

LARGE REPRESENTATIVE BODY
AT CONGREGATIONAL SERV-ICES THIS MORNING.

SERMON BY DR. BEATON

G. A. R. Comrades Assembled in Body—Grand Army Veterans
In Charge of Grave
Obsèques.

"He had in him a rich, strong and helpful nature, because he was kind and lovable. His service in the church was an inspiration to the minister and to the members. He was a lover of recreation, he had many interests, and the many with many sympathies. Evidence is that he was a leader and helper of men. This representative assembly is here to pay sincere expression for the highest regard in which Capt. Norcross was held." This was the tribute paid to the late Capt. Pliny Norcross this morning by Rev. David Beaton, in his funeral sermon at the services held in the First Congregational church at ten-thirty o'clock.

He went on, "Friendship is one of the best things in life. As life grows older, this friendship becomes more evident in view of the fact that a larger vision of the gospel is attained. Capt. Norcross was a member of a learned profession. He was a public-spirited citizen. His name has appeared in the Wisconsin state legislature and as mayor of this city, and has been held in the highest estimation, for how as a man of service. We can safely say of him, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord.'

Rev. Charles E. Ewing of the First Congregational church, opened the services with a lesson from the scriptures, of which the first was the parable of a few choice words, then offered a prayer. The service was closed with a vocal solo, 'Abide With Me,' by Miss Josephine Treat, Miss Adeline Poole, and Miss Margaret. The organ and played the prelude and recessional. Floral wreaths and designs covered the church altar and the coffin. At the right of the altar the American flag and the Wisconsin state flag stood. The coffin was draped with the stars and stripes. In reference to the service of the deceased, the Rev. Dr. Beaton said, "He was a man of large affairs, and it is the duty, or should be, of children and parents, to express their reverence and love for the memory of him who struggled that this nation might live."

The procession was a long one, several carriages conveying the old comrades to the final resting place. The funeral was held at the residence of the deceased, where in addition to the numerous carriages, which were the immediate and distant relatives of the deceased. At the church, members of the Rock County Bar association were seated in a body.

The active pallbearers were selected from the old 13th Wisconsin regiment, of which the deceased was an officer. Many of them being former members of his old company which he commanded. Co. K. They were: O. C. Garthwaite, Co. K. Milton, Vernon, Alvin Alder, Co. K. Edgerton, W. P. Clarke, Co. K. Milton; W. A. Wyse, Co. K. Reedsburg; G. S. Burton, Co. A. Janesville; and Del. Chamberlain, Co. P. Rockford. Other members of the 13th regiment who attended the rites are: A. R. Campbell, Co. A. Albion; Joseph West, Co. D. Evansville; G. M. Thomas, Co. F. Edgerton; G. M. Good, Co. D. Footville; Albert Marskie, Co. H. Whitewater; George Croft, Co. F. Lima Center; Albert Stillman, Co. A. Lima Center; and others.

Lawrence Post, senior vice commander of the Madison Post, and a member of the 3rd Wisconsin. Co. K. J. Morgan of the 10th Wisconsin, of Evansville, formerly in partnership with the deceased in this city. Among the members of the W. H. Sargent Post who attended the services, in a body were: Comrades Morse, C. R. Evans, Murphy, Weaver, B. H. Baldwin, Reeder, J. F. Carle, John Cruse, Glen, Michael Bowen, E. Taylor, J. and H. Burnham, offered prayer, after which Comrades Scottie, Baldwin and Vine deposited flowers and emblems over the remains of Captain Norcross, who was made to rest in Oak Hill cemetery. W. J. McKay of Madison rendered an excellent talk before the body was lowered.

French Ingenuity. A hollow wooden ball, six feet in diameter, which is moved by the flow of the sewage, is used to remove obstructions from sewers in Paris.

Ancient Governments Similar. The Aztecs and the Incas had governments much like those of European nations of the same era. Anthropologists do not consider this an evidence that there existed a prehistoric link between the old and the new worlds. Men under similar environments develop similar institutions.

Miss Thiele was taken ill in St. Louis, where she was with an opera company, and was taken to the St. Louis sanitarium for treatment. Early in January of this year she had recovered sufficiently to be removed to her home in this city, but she had failed to improve and has been confined to the house practically all the time.

Miss Thiele was born Oct. 12, 1886 at Jefferson, Wis. She came to Janesville with her parents and attended St. Joseph's academy and later the Janesville high school. She displayed an early talent for music and in addition to her study of voice culture, became proficient in the piano. She was a member of the Janesville Music club and then started out to realize her ambition to get into comic opera. Her hopes were realized at last and for three years she followed her chosen profession and was attaining real distinction when her illness forced her to discontinue the work.

Miss Thiele's talent as musician was well known and appreciated in this city. She was pianist at the Myers theatre for a time and she took prominent parts in amateur theatricals and musicals. She also leaves to her credit a number of excellent compositions. She was a young woman of charm, deeply beloved by a host of friends, who sorrow with the members of the family at her early passing.

FILES A DECISION ON M'DERMOTT WILL

Judge Fifield Rules in Favor of Male Issue of the Children of the Late Miles McDermott.

Judge C. L. Fifield of the county court has given his decision in the case of the will of Miles McDermott, who died in the town of Janesville on January 13, 1886. The action brought before the court during April of this year upon the petition of William McDermott for a construction of the will and for assignment of the estate. The peculiarity of the situation was brought out when it was proposed to sell a parcel of the real estate located in the town of Janesville.

According to the will the widow and the children of Miles McDermott were given tenancy of life estate in the property which should pass to the issue of the male issue, or the grandsons. Judge Fifield in his opinion says:

"That the determination of who shall take the remainder after the death of the widow is to be made at the time of each of their deaths. That is, the gift over to the male issue, the issue of the male issue, is a gift to a class under the case of Cushman vs. Ross, and goes to those of the class alive at the termination of the precedent estate.

"That it was the true intention and meaning of Miles McDermott in using the words 'male issue' of his sons and daughters, to limit the same to the children of his sons and daughters. If he has said, then to the sons of John McDermott, etc., excluding his daughters."

In conclusion Judge Fifield takes upon the question of vesting and says: "In this case the death of any son (grandson of Miles) it would terminate any interest that may have been vested in him at the time of his death. He never had any interest therein."

The case has attracted considerable attention among attorneys and it is hoped that the decision will be taken from the decision. J. J. Cunningham had the case for the petitioner and E. D. McGowan for the grandson, Frank McDermott.

HAVE BIG BALANCE IN CITY TREASURY

Grand Balance Shows City Has on Hand a Total of $147,991.91 in Funds.

Janesville finances are enjoying a firmer basis than in many years previous, according to the report of City Treasurer, G. W. Muenchow, made this morning at the city hall. The report shows that on July first there is a balance left in the city treasury of $147,991.91 as compared to $144,854.85 at the corresponding time last year. This increased balance is due to the large balances left in the various funds, despite the heavy expense of the street department in

The amounts left in the more important funds are as follows: School, $5,048.22; general, $12,201.61 (an unusual large balance for this time of year) fire and water, $9,710.40; light, $9,004.35; library, $3,205.12; bridge, $6,802.96; first ward, $8,122.41; second ward, $6,868.26; third ward, $2,885.55; fourth ward, $2,437.06; city hall, $1,862.94; municipal court, $603.91; water fund, $196.31, which is the amount left over after paying the interest on the outstanding bonds; debt, $1,000.00; license money, $22,500.00. The water works fund of $2,936 is for the payment of interest and bonds due on the city issue of eight thousand dollars. A total of $1,028 has been received for dog licenses on July first.

Rye Grass. Rye grass is believed to be the oldest grass specially raised for forage, having been thus cultivated in England more than two centuries ago.

There will be a special meeting of the board of directors of the Y. M. C. A. next week, to confer with the new secretary, C. R. Berryman, who is to start work at the local institution the fifteenth of August. The night has not been set, due to the fact that Mr. Berryman cannot specify the night upon which he can make his appearance. It is said that he has several matters of importance to introduce to the directors, before taking up the work. His first task will be that of planning a campaign for membership.

SIDE TALKS

BY RUTH K. CAMERON

PAINLESS FINANCIAL DENTISTRY.
What a costly thing is the average person's unwillingness to give to philanthropy and charity. He has the money dragged out of him by a cake sale, a bazaar, a pageant or some similar device of that polite fiction—painless financial dentistry.

A big entertainment was given recently in a neighboring town for the benefit of two charities.

The money turned over to the charities was $500—two hundred and fifty apiece.

Not bad, you say.

Not at all, unless you consider the rest of the budget. The total proceeds were $1,800, the expenses were $1,300.

That is, if the money which was expended on that entertainment had been given directly to the charities, each charity would have had $500 instead of $250.

The Pleasure Of Giving Painlessly.
And yet, of course, that is a purely utilitarian view of the matter. One must remember the other side. The people who went to the entertainment received pleasure for their money and at the same time had the sensation of giving it away, while the people who took part in the entertainment had that even more delightful, double-barreled joy—the pleasure of being the cynosure of all eyes and the happiness of doing something for charity without any disagreeable effort or self-sacrifice.

And then, of course, the uses of society are served by such affairs, since they provide opportunities for friendly meetings and chances for social intercourse, and that is part of life, and no small or mean part.

I Like Charity Straight.
Personally I like to take my charity straight. I like to put aside a certain sum for charity and philanthropy and give it directly to the people who need or to further the general cause of social betterment. Then I like to take my entertainment straight, basing my selection solely on what I enjoy the most.

But this is a purely personal point of view and I do not claim it is the only one or the best one. Perhaps the sum people will spend for charity combined is so much larger than that they would spend for charity straight that the charities would lose by the direct method.

I wonder.

Question—I came close to a nervous breakdown a year ago. I do not seem myself since. I have fears that are almost unbearable, although I never used to be timid. There are times when trifles excite me all out of proportion. One of my friends suggests mental science. What do you think?

Answer—I believe a great many physicians now recommend such treatment in cases like yours. The only instance I know of where it has been successful was that of a young man who had an absolute horror of the water. He tried to combat it and once even ventured out sailing. He became hysterical and begged to be put ashore. He finally went to a mental scientist and a few weeks ago he put himself to the test by again going sailing. He appeared and said he felt as serene as a May morning.

Heart and Home Problems
Letters May Be Addressed To Mrs. Thompson, In Care of The Gazette.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I presume that you rarely get this kind of a letter from a man. I am a widower who has re-married. About a year ago the girl that I wanted to marry wrote a letter to you asking me to ask you about marriage. She said that I was the father of two children, a girl of twelve and a boy of fourteen. She did not know whether she would be happy under these conditions, but she said she loved me dearly and as she was an orphan and had three children she thought she might be happier than leading the lonely life that she was.

You told her that as long as she loved me you thought she could be happy, but not to marry unless she could be a good mother to the children.

She married me and our life has been one round of trouble ever since. She quarrels with the children all day long and when I get home at night she does nothing but tell me how disagreeable the children are. The poor kiddies are the most unhappy children in the world and now that they are under her management they are really very trying and disagreeable.

What can you advise me to do to save my children's dispositions from being forever ruined? DAD.

Why not send the children away for a visit, in order to permit them and your wife to regain control of their nerves? The situation is a trying one for all of course. When the family is reunited after such a vacation efforts should be made by all to maintain an atmosphere of forbearance and peace.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: While away from home I met a young man of whom I think a great deal. I was visiting an aunt in another state and this man lived in the town near my aunt's farm. One night when I was visiting my aunt's home, I was asked to take me home, and after that he took me buggy riding several times. When I left he kissed me goodby, and I am sorry now because I don't hear anything more from him. I wrote him a letter and he answered it, but he never answered my letter. He was such a nice young man that I thought something must be wrong and so I wrote to him again, but he did not answer that letter either. I know he got it because it had my home address on it and I said that if it was not received in five days to return it. That was three days ago and I have not got it back nor heard a word. I think it would be wrong to write again, as I love him very much? Or would you wait for him to write it?

Wait for him to write. He must in time. I fear, though, that this young man is a trifler, who should be avoided.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am just eighteen and I'm very much in love with a young man a few years my senior. He has taken me out and called at my house several times, but the last time he was cold and distant and referred to another man, a friend of mine, whom he thought was going with me, and so he did not make any appointment with me. I feel sorry because I like him very much. I was just as cold and distant as he was. Now, do you think he cares for me? And how will I gain him back again? Please tell me. I do right by being cold to him and how can I find a way to overcome all obstacles? ANXIOUS ONE.

There is nothing you can do to win him back. He will come if he wants to. I don't blame you for being cold when you felt that he was indifferent.

NOVEL CASE.
This is a new and unusual way of arranging roses.

Cut a piece of cardboard to fit a deep baking dish, then punch holes in the cardboard and stick the roses through these holes. The roses should be spaced about one inch apart.

BAKING HINT.
If you will give your cakes a few light taps on a table just before putting them into the oven, they will never fall. This will cause all the air bubbles to come to the surface and break so that there is no chance to cause the cake to fall in the oven.

TOMATO BOUILLON.
One peck tomatoes, twelve small onions, three stalks celery, two peppers (mangos), will make a bunch parsley. Cook well, put through sieve, put back on stove, let come to boil, then stir in one-half cup sugar, one-fourth cup salt (as thickening), one-half cup butter. Cook good; seal while boiling hot.

THE TABLE.
Fried Beet Root—Style—Dip sliced beets into well-beaten eggs and then into cracker crumbs. Season by sprinkling with plenty of salt and a little pepper. Fry in butter.

Cherry Pudding.
One cup sugar, one cup milk, one cup flour, one cup butter, one cup cherries, one cup raisins, one cup currants, one cup small piece butter, two cups boiling water. Pour dressing over batter and bake three-fourths hour. When done the pudding will be on top and the dressing underneath. Be sure to bake in pan large enough. Serve with sauce or cream. This is good with many other kinds of fruit.

Asparagus Salad.
If the stalks of asparagus are drained and rinsed they can be used as well as the fresh; cut rings one-third inch wide from a bright green pepper. Place several stalks of asparagus in each ring, arrange on lettuce and serve with French dressing to which has been added one-half tablespoon of tomato catsup.

Berry Shortcake.
One-half cup sugar, one cup flour, one cup butter, one cup berries, one cup small piece butter, two cups boiling water. Pour dressing over batter and bake three-fourths hour. When done the pudding will be on top and the dressing underneath. Be sure to bake in pan large enough. Serve with sauce or cream. This is good with many other kinds of fruit.

"Thomas sleeps on this porch?"
"My dear, he'll have pneumonia. Of course you can't guard his health as we did. His mother and I spent years studying his constitution. Please use your influence against this fresh air fad at once."

"He is headstrong and you are as yielding as his mother. She would have polio him if it hadn't been for me. Often I've jumped out of bed to put extra blankets on the crib or close a window. His lungs were weak and the night air did him harm."

"You can't convince me it's healthy. He must not lie in damp—"

"That reminds me. Be firm about underclothes. We made him wear those light things on the line explain why he is coughing—"

"Cigarettes? Good heavens! You LET him smoke?"
"Well, I suppose a college girl is never as devoted as an old-fashioned woman."

"Oh, indeed—the Poor Boy says he is comfortable. But don't encourage him to have his own way. You must curb his extravagance and set a good example."

"Your habits aren't really bad, child. Still, Thomas drank coffee at breakfast and the doctor said his digestion—"

"I'm finding fault. Why, I played he'd marry a Presbyterian. But—should remove temptation by giving up coffee yourself, dear. We always did such thoughtful things when Thomas was HOME."

Glimpses of Married Life
BY MRS. EVA LEONARD

"Why, how do you happen to be home at this time of day?" asked Nell in surprise as Dick tore into the house in great haste.

"I got a long distance call from Kansas City."

"From the lawyer who is working on that inheritance deal? He wants me to come down there at once. If you can help me get ready I can make the afternoon train."

"What does it mean?" asked Nell, taking the suit case out of its enveloping bag in the closet.

"That's what I am going to find out," said Dick, kicking me to come at once; said it was necessary to see me."

"That's encouraging. I should think," replied Nell. "Throw me a pair of socks will you? Thanks." Dick's arms were going through the air like the fans of a windmill.

"How long will you be gone?" asked Nell.

"Oh, only over night. I'll be back tomorrow evening at latest. Are you afraid to stay alone?" Dick jerked the words out with the rapidity of his motion.

"No, I'll go over to Jo's house if I get lonely."

"So I thought."

"Where's my pleated shirt with the brown lines in it? Funny thing, my clothes are never in my drawer."

"Dick was pawing the drawer like a terrier after a rat."

"Isn't it there? Let me look."

"Here it is. Nell handed him the shirt. 'You paw things into such a mess no wonder you can't find anything.' She was rearranging the garments before closing the drawer."

"Dick murmured something inaudible as he plunged his arms into the shirt sleeves."

"Got my suit case packed?" he asked.

"I have your pajamas, some handkerchiefs, a pair of extra socks, a couple of collars and your shaving outfit. Anything else you want?"

"Yes, put in a couple of magazines to read on the train."

"Where in time are my collar buttons? If they are not the most elusive things—"

"Take the ones out of the shirt you just took off," suggested Nell.

"I might do that. Great head!" He grinned at Nell while he struggled to get the buttons in place.

"Well, luck to you, dear. I hope you come home with your pockets full of gold," said Nell as she kissed him goodby.

TOOK IDEAL CARE OF CONFEDERATE GRAVES

Tribute Is Paid Late Mrs. Waterman of Madison For Her Work at Forest Hill Cemetery.

The soul of a poet as well as a saint resided in Mrs. Alice Waterman, the subject of this brief tribute. When the island No. 10 was captured, in April, 1862, a few hundred of the Confederate prisoners taken were sent north to Camp Randall, at Madison, Wisconsin. Their constitutions broken by exposure and disease, they died like flies in their Northland prison. The bodies of those who thus perished—at times as many as ten a day—were laid away in a plot of ground at the edge of Forest Hill Cemetery. The spot soon became known locally as Confederate Rest. With the passage of years, however, it bid fair to be forgotten, when a southern born woman came to Madison to live. Learning of the lonely graves in Confederate Rest, she undertook, single-handed, the work of beautifying the spot. She had not space to tell the story of her long labor of love, but the tangible results of her work may be seen by any visitor to Madison who will take the trouble to ride out to the beautiful and well kept ground where the dead Confederates "rest." Although a total stranger to them in life, Mrs. Waterman always called them "My boys." She planted an evergreen hedge around the plot to "keep the wind off my boys," and white lilacs amid the graves because they would blossom even when she was "not there to watch them," and she gave as her reason for setting out two butternut trees, that "the children will go there to gather the nuts, and thus make the place more pleasant by their presence."

Mrs. Waterman died at Madison in 1897. Her body was laid away beside "her boys" in Confederate Rest; her memory is enshrined in the heart of their surviving comrades of the First Alabama Regiment.

CHAPTER VI.

Had They Spoiled Her?

Music resounded in the parlors of Jim Sargent's house; music so sweet and compelling in its harmony that Aunt Grace slipped to the head of the stairs to listen in mingled ecstasy and pride. Up through the hallway floated a clear, mellow soprano and a rich, deep baritone, blended so perfectly that they seemed twin tones. Aunt Grace, drawn by a fascination she could not resist, crept down to where she could see the source of the melody. Gail, exceptionally pretty to-night in her simple dove-colored gown with its one pink rose, sat at the piano, while towering above her, with his chest expanded and a look of perfect peace on his face, stood Rev. Smith Boyd.

Enraptured, Aunt Grace stood and listened until the close of the ballad. Leading through her music for the next treat, Gail looked up at the young doctor, and made some smiling remark. Her shining brown hair, waving about her forehead, was caught up in a simple knot at the back, and the delicate color of her cheeks was like the fresh glow of dawn. Rev. Smith Boyd bent slightly to answer, and he, too, smiled as he spoke; but as he happened to find himself gazing deep into the brown eyes of Gail, the smile began to fade, and Aunt Grace Sargent, scared, ran back up the stairs and into her own room, where she took a book, and held it in her lap, upside down. The remark which Gail had made was this:

"You should have used your voice professionally."

The reply of the rector was:

"I do."

"I didn't mean oratorically," she laughed, then returned nervously to her search for the next selection. She had seen that change in the smile. "It is so rare to find a perfect speaking voice coupled with a perfect singing voice," she rattled on. "Here's that simple little 'May Song.' Just harmony, that's all."

Once more their voices rose in that perfect blending which is the most delicate of all exhilarations. In the melody itself there was an appealing sympathy, and, in that moment, these two were in as perfect accord as their voices. There is something in the

The butler, an aggravating image with only one joint in his body, paraded solemnly through the hall, and back again with the card tray, while Gail and the rector sang "Jeanita" from an old college songbook, which the Reverend Boyd had discovered in high glee. Aunt Grace came down the stairs and out past the doors of the music salon. There were voices of animated greeting in the hall, and Aunt Grace returned to the door just as the rector was spreading open the book at "Sweet and Low."

"Pardon me," beamed aunt. "There's a little surprise out here for you."

A rush of noise filled the hall. Lucile and Ted Teasdale, handsome Dick Rodley and Arly Fosland and Houston Van Ploon, had come clattering in as an escort for Mrs. Davies, whose pet fad was to have as many young people as possible bring her home from any place.

"Where's the baby?" demanded handsome Dick Rodley, heading for the stairs.

"Silly, you mustn't!" cried Lucile, and started after him. "Flakes should be asleep at this hour."

"I came in for the sole purpose of teaching Flakes the turkey trot," declared handsome Dick, and ran away, followed by Lucile.

"Lucile's becoming passe," criticized Ted. "She's flirting with Rodney for the second time."

"Can you blame her?" defended Arly Fosland. She was sitting in the deep corner of her favorite couch, nursing a slender ankle, and even her shining black hair, to say nothing of her shining black eyes, seemed to be snapping with wicked delight.

Lucile and handsome Dick came struggling down the stairway with Flakes between them, and Gail sprang instantly to take the bewildered puppy from them both. Little blonde Lucile gave up her interest to the prior right, but Rodley pretended to be obstinate about it. His deep eyes burned down into Gail's, as he stood bending above her, and his smile, to Boyd's concentrated gaze, had in it that dangerous fascination which few women could resist. Gail was positively smiling up into his eyes!

"Tableau!" called Ted. "All ready for the next reel."

"Hold it a while," begged Arly, and even Rev. Smith Boyd was forced to admit that the picture was handsome enough to be retained. The Adonis-like Dick, with his black hair and black eyes, his curly black mustache and his black goatee, his pink cheeks and his white teeth; Gail, gracefully erect, her head thrown back, her brown hair waving and her fluffy white Flakes between them; it was painfully beautiful.

"Children, go home," suddenly commanded Mrs. Davies. "Dick, put the dog back where you found it."

"I suppose we'll have to go home," drawled Ted. "Dick, put back that dog."

"Put away the dog, Dick," ordered the heavier voice of young Van Ploon. "Come along, Gail, I'll put him away."

At his approach, Dick placed the puppy, with great care, in Gail's charge, and took her arm. Van Ploon took her other arm, and together the trio, laughing, went away to return Flakes to his bed. They clung to her most affectionately, bending over her on either side; and they called her Gail!

The others were ready to go when they returned from the collie nursery, and the three young men stood for a moment in a row near the door. Gail looked them over with a puzzled expression. What was there about them which was so attractive? Was it poise, assurance, polish, breeding, experience, insolence, grooming—what? Even the stiff Van Ploon seemed smooth of bearing tonight!

They still were standing in the hall, and the front door opened.

"Brought you a prodigal," hailed Uncle Jim, slipping his latchkey in his pocket as he held the door open for the prodigal in question.

Gail was watching the doorway. Someone outside was vigorously stamping his feet. The prodigal came in, and proved to be Allison, buoyant of step, sparkling of eye, firm of jaw, and ruddy from the night wind. Smiling with the sureness of welcome, he came eagerly up to Gail, and took her hand, retaining it until she felt compelled to withdraw it, recognizing again that thrill. The barest trace of a flush came into her cheeks, and paled again.

Gail changed her garments and let down her waving hair, and disdaining the help of her maid, performed all the little nightly duties, to the putting away of her clothing. Then, in a perfectly neat and orderly boudoir, she sat down to take herself seriously in hand.

There was a knock at the door and on invitation, the tall and stately Mrs. Helen Davies came in, frilled and ruffled for the night. She found the dainty, little guest boudoir in green tinted dimness. Gail had turned down all the lights in the room except the green lamps under the canopy, and she sat on the divan, with her brown hair rippling about her shoulders, her knees clasped in her arms, and her dainty little boudoir slippers peeping from her flowing pink negligee, while the dim green light, suited to her present reflections, only enhanced the clear pink of her complexion. Mrs. Davies moved over to the other side of Gail, where she could surround her, and laid the brown head on her shoulder.

Gail, whose quick intelligence no movement escaped, lay comfortably on Aunt Helen's shoulder, and a clear laugh rippled out. She could not see the smile of satisfaction and relief with which Aunt Helen Davies received that laugh.

"My dear," I am quite well pleased with you," she said. "You have a brilliant future before you."

Gail's eyelids closed; the long, brown lashes curved down on her cheeks, revealing just a sparkle of brightness, while the mischievous little smile twitched at the corners of her lips.

"If you were an ordinary girl, I would urge you, tonight, to make a selection among the exceptionally excellent matrimonial material of which you have a choice, but, with your extraordinary talents and beauty, my advice is just to the contrary. You should delay until you have had a wider opportunity for judgment. You have not as yet shown any marked preference, I hope."

Gail's quite unreasoning impulse was to giggle, but she clothed her voice demurely.

"No, Aunt Helen."

"You are remarkably wise," complimented Aunt Helen, a bit of appreciation which quite checked Gail's impulse to giggle. "In the meantime, it is just as well to study your opportunities. Of course there's Dick Rodley, whom no one considers seriously, and Willis Cunningham, whose one and only drawback is such questionable health that he might persistently interfere with your social activities. Houston Van Ploon, I am frank to say, is the most eligible of all, and to have attracted his attention is a distinct triumph. Mr. Allison, while rather advanced in years—"

"Please!" cried Gail. "You'd think I was a horse."

"I know just how you feel," stated Aunt Helen, entirely untroubled; "but you have your future to consider, and I wish to invite your confidence," and in her voice there was the quaver of much concern.

"Thank you, Aunt Helen," said Gail, realizing the sincerity of the older woman's intentions, and, putting her arms around Mrs. Davies' neck, she kissed her. "It is dear of you to take so much interest."

"I think it's pride," confessed Mrs. Davies, naively. "I won't keep you up a minute longer, Gail. Go to bed, and get all the sleep you can. Only sleep will keep those roses in your cheeks. Good-night," and with a parting caress she went to her own room, with a sense of a duty well performed.

Gail smiled retrospectively, and tried the blue light under the canopy lamp, but turned it out immediately. The green gave a much better effect of moonlight on the floor.

She called herself back out of the mists of her previous thought. Who was this Gail, and what was she? There had come a new need in her, a new awakening. Something seemed to have changed in her, to have crystallized. Whatever this crystallization was, it had made her know that marriage was not to be looked upon as a mere inevitable social episode. Her thoughts flew back to Aunt Helen. Her eyelashes brushed her cheeks, and the little smile of sarcasm twitched the corners of her lips.

Aunt Helen's list of eligibles. Gail reviewed them now deliberately; not with the thought of the social advantages they might offer her, but as men. She reviewed others whom she had met. For the first time in her life, she was frankly and self-consciously interested in men; curious about them. She had reached her third stage of development; the fairy prince age, the "I suppose I shall have to be married one day" age, and now the age of conscious awakening. She wondered, in some perplexity, as to what had brought about her nascent; rather, and she knitted her pretty brows, who had brought it about?

The library clock chimed the hour, and startled her out of her reverie. She turned on the lights, and sat in front of her mirror to give her hair one of those extra brushings for which it was so grateful, and which it repaid with so much beauty. She paused deliberately, to study herself in the glass.

Why, this was a new Gail, a more potent Gail. What was it Allison had said about her potentialities? Allison, Strong, forceful, aggressive Allison. He was potent himself. A thrill of his handclasp clung with her yet, and a slight flush crept into her cheeks.

Aunt Grace had worried about Jim's little cold, and the distant mouse she thought she heard, and the silver chest, and Lucile's dangerous-looking new horse, until all these topics had faded, when she detected the unmistakable click of a switch button near by. It must be in Gail's suite. Hadn't the child retired yet? She lay quite still pondering that mighty question for ten minutes, and then, unable to rest any longer, she slipped out of bed and across the hall. There was no light coming from under the doors of either the boudoir or the bedroom, so Aunt Grace peeped into the latter apartment, then she tiptoed softly away. Gail, in her cascade of pink flufferies, was at the north window, kneeling, with her earnest face upturned to one bright, pale star.

Dinner Stories

A young business man who has been married but a short time was seated at the table one evening just before dinner with the joyful announcement that she had that very afternoon received her diploma from the cooking school at which she had been an assiduous student for some time.

"And I've prepared the whole dinner tonight!" she added gayly.

When they were seated at the table and the young man was endeavoring to masticate a particularly tough piece of one of the new dishes, his wife suddenly said:

"I took special pains with the dish you are eating. Guess what it is?"

"Well, I really don't know," he replied uncertainly. "Is it the diploma?"

Polly, the washerwoman, was deep in a discussion of her family's shortcomings.

"Mah fambly sutlinly do hab some shawt-comin'," she declared. "Fur instance: Mah son Jawge er jes' lak a grasshopper."

"My goodness," gasped the mistress. "How Polly!"

"Well, bulcawse only two things in de whole worl' worries him: He worries dat he has to wake up to eat, an' den he worries dat he hab to stop eatin' to go to sleep."

"Fur bulcawse he er de most misundastandable creature dat Ah kin think of, dat's why," she answered.

Mr. Wise Guy sat beside the road watching his chauffeur doctor a puncture. Presently a farmer, leading a youthful calf, passed.

"Where'd you get the calf, Ruber?" Mr. Wise Guy inquired impudently.

"Set a hen on a bottle o' milk," was the reply.

And Mr. Wise Guy was mean enough to threaten to fire the chauffeur for laughing.

Where Are Yesterday's Dreams? Do you remember where you were ten years ago today? And how many of the ambitions that you had then have been fulfilled?

Something About Sleep. How much sleep is necessary for a man? The question was raised centuries ago by Montaigne. "Phisians," he wrote, "may consider whether sleep be so necessary that our life must needs depend on it, for we find that Persus, king of Macedon, prisoner at Rome, being kept from sleep, was made to die; but Plinius saith that some have lived a long time without any sleep at all. And Herodotus reporteth there are nations where men sleep and wake by half years. And those that write the life of Epimenides the wise affirm that he slept the continual space of seven and fifty years."

TWELVE INCH SHELLS.

These Big Projectiles Carry a Thirty Pound Explosive Charge.

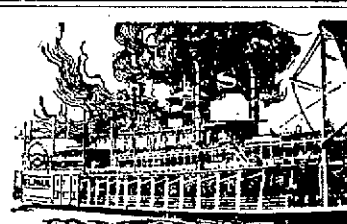

High power projectiles are constructed with cavities in their centers which contain the explosive charge, the explosive carried varying with the size of the projectile. A twelve inch shell, weighing 870 pounds, carries about thirty pounds of explosive. The cavity of such a projectile is about seven inches in diameter at the base, and gradually tapers in size toward the point. After the charge is placed in the projectile a plug is screwed into the base, thus sealing up the explosive, and a fuse is inserted in the center of the plug extending into the explosive within the cavity.

The fuse, without which the explosive is harmless, depends upon the high rotary motion of the shell to become active. This rotary motion is imparted by the rifling of the gun. In the smooth surface of the tube are cut the rifling grooves of a width of about one-eighth inch.

Round the shell, near its base, in a groove cut for the purpose, is compressed what is known as the rotating band. This band projects above the surface of the shell and corresponds with the rifling grooves, so that upon its discharge it is forced into the rifling, where it acts as a seal to prevent the escape of the gas formed by the exploding powder and gives the shell the required rotary motion, which keeps it on its true course with its point always in a direct line ahead.—London Tit-Bits.

Mr. Merchant--

The merchant who buys advertised goods needs less store advertising and less salesmanship back of the merchandise he handles.

Advertised goods advertise the store that handles them.

The manufacturer who advertises in the local paper endorses the quality and price of his product. He spends his money in your town, where it comes back to you in trade.

The manufacturer who sells you goods that he does not advertise puts the burden of expense of advertising and salesmanship up to you. Even if you had to pay more for a line of goods that was advertised in the newspapers by the manufacturer you save more.

The purchasing power of the local trade is increased by the money spent in advertising by the manufacturer.

The combined power of the local trade is increased by the money spent in advertising by the manufacturer.

The combined expenditure in The Janesville Daily Gazette by manufacturers from all over the United States amounts to about $15,000 a year. Every family in Janesville gets a part of this money because it stays in Janesville.

Why not use more, buy more, insist on having only advertised goods and increase the wealth of Janesville.

THE CONFESSION

By MAY CUNNINGHAM COBB.

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.)

"It will cast a gloom over our marriage, Ethel," said Harry Bentwich, despondently. "But that is part of a lawyer's fate, and we must take the bad with the good."

"And there is no longer any hope of saving the poor man?" inquired Ethel sadly.

"Not unless a miracle occurs," answered her lover.

"How dreadful!" sighed Ethel.

Harry Bentwich and Ethel were to be married two days later, and that was the day fixed for Kemp's execution. Harry had fought with all his might to save Kemp, but the circumstantial evidence was too strong. He had been convicted, the court of appeals had sustained the verdict, and the governor had refused to intervene.

Ethel had read the stories of the trial. She knew that Kemp and Goodnow were both longshoremen, men of low character and evil reputation among the comparatively decent class of the neighborhood in which they resided. Yet that was no reason why Kemp's life should be snuffed out for a crime he had not committed.

The marriage was to take place at eight in the morning, and that was the hour at which Kemp's life was to be taken. This so wrought upon the girl that she resolved to have an evening wedding the day before. Harry readily accepted the change of plans, and, since the marriage was to be strictly a private one, Ethel concluded her morning work at the Settlement on the day of her marriage.

Then she strolled along the region of the docks, where she was well known and safe from molestation. As she turned to ascend the street leading to her residence, she perceived a little crowd gathered at the head of one of the wharves. Hurrying up, she found that an accident had happened. A man had been struck down by a load that fell from a crane, and fearfully mangled. It was evident that he had only a few minutes to live, and what made the scene worse, he was in great pain and fully conscious.

Ethel, kneeling at his side, attempted in vain to staunch the blood that flowed from his crushed body. He looked up at her. He seemed to recognize her.

"You're the Settlement lady, ain't you?" he gasped. "You was going to be married to Mr. Bentwich?"

"Yes," answered Ethel. "But you must not talk. The doctor will be here in a few minutes and you must keep quiet and not exert yourself."

"I will talk," the man burst out with sudden vehemence. "My name's Goodnow. Mean anything to you?" he added savagely.

"If you are Goodnow you will tell the truth about Kemp before you die," said Ethel quietly.

"Aye, I'll tell you," answered the man. "I know I'm going to croak, and I don't want Kemp to be touched off now that it won't do no good to me. Kemp said he was with me all the evening of the murder, but that's a lie. He wasn't."

"He wasn't?" cried Ethel in despair.

"No. But he thought he was," said Goodnow. "We'd been having a few glasses together, and Kemp fell asleep in the chair. Then I put on his hat and overcoat and went and done it myself."

"What did you do?" asked Ethel, striving to retain her self-composure.

"Croaked him—the man what Kemp is supposed to have croaked," grunted Goodnow savagely.

"You killed him?"

"Yes. He was trying to blackmail the pair of us about a job we pulled off in Philadelphia last year."

He groaned and tried to continue, but suddenly a fearful paroxysm of pain racked his body, and he drifted into the last unconsciousness.

Ethel looked round her in a daze, trying to collect her thoughts. A bystander touched her on the arm. She looked up into the face of a respectable-looking man.

"I heard every word he said, Miss," said the fellow. "And we must get that confession before the governor at once."

"Yes," exclaimed Ethel, eagerly. "You must come with me. There is not a minute to lose."

Half an hour later they sat side by side aboard the train bound for the capital. And just about the time when Ethel should have been with Harry before the minister, they were being ushered into the governor's office.

He heard Ethel's evidence gravely enough, and that of her companion, but when they had finished speaking there was a faint smile upon his face.

"I shall grant a respite pending a full examination of this matter," he said. "But now, let me ask you a question. Did you not come here at a considerable personal sacrifice this afternoon?"

"Yes. I was to have been married," answered Ethel. "But Harry will understand. Now may I ask you how you know about this?"

"O, it is my duty to know all sorts of things," the governor answered. "Come with me a moment, if you will be so kind."

He led the girl into a private room behind his office, and there, seated at a table, writing, was—Harry! And in a moment they were in each other's arms.

CHIGGER VISIT DUE
IN THE MIDDLE WEST

Harvest Mite or Red Bug Due to Make His Annual Unpleasant Visit—Attention Paid to Bermuda Grass.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)

Washington, July 14.—The annual visit of the chigger is on. Throughout the Mississippi valley states, as far north as Illinois and Missouri and extending across to the Atlantic coast states, the chigger is making himself known wherever people picnic or work in the long grass, though some call him the harvest mite and others merely the red bug. Barefoot boys know him best and love him least.

The chigger's habit is to affix himself with all his eight legs to the boy's bare skin, or to worm himself in some mysterious manner through a summer's silken hose—enter the pores of the skin and stay there. In a few hours the spot becomes very painful and causes intense itching.

The large inflamed spots are often diagnosed as hives, nettle rash, urticaria, or wheals, and closely resemble the bite of mosquitoes. On the second or third day a minute water blister usually develops. If a hot water or water containing soap or salt is taken within a few hours, no ill effects are likely.

A person walking through vegetation is attracted mostly from the knees down, and an Agriculture Department bulletin suggests sitting flowers of sulphur in the underclothing from the knees downward and into the shoes and stockings. Naphthalene is also successfully used in the same manner and is a safeguard against several other forms of man-infesting tropical insects.

Where a large area is to be ridden of the mites, it is recommended by the bulletin that the grass be cut closely, weeds eliminated and useless herbage mowed as closely as feasible, so as to expose the mites to the sun. It may be practical to spray the grass after cutting with flowers of sulphur or a diluted spray of kerosene emulsion in which sulphur has been mixed.

Bermuda grass, called the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde of the grass world, is coming in for considerable discussion among agriculturists. Wire grass, as it is commonly named, may be a valuable forage plant or a serious weed pest, as circumstances determine. By sending out shoots at frequent intervals, Bermuda grass forms a close sod, which has its good points where forage grass is wanted. It is the most valuable pasture grass in the South, but when it gets a start in a cotton field or other cultivated fields, it is difficult of control. In Arizona and Southern California, it has proved such an enemy of the alfalfa crop that they have named it devil-grass.

As a forage plant, its valuable properties are resistance to heat, drought and trampling by live stock, though it is quite susceptible to frost. This is chiefly of value in states no farther north than Virginia and Kentucky. Cut early, Bermuda grass makes good hay and two crops ordinarily can be cut each year. A rich, moist soil will yield several tons an acre. Pastures and meadows should be plowed every few years, otherwise becoming sodbound.

WISCONSIN RURAL CHURCHES
NEED MINISTERS TRAINED ON PROBLEMS OF FARMERS

Not only the open country church, but the village and small city churches, as well, should be conversed and familiar with the problems of the farmer. Reasons for this were given in the report of a survey just completed by C. J. Galpin, secretary of the Wisconsin Country Life Conference.

This survey was made for the purpose of finding ways of improving and meeting the needs of the rural and small town church. The churches of a representative denomination in every state in the Union were canvassed and it is believed that the results obtained will aid materially in meeting the needs of country parishes.

The surveyors found that in the country parishes ninety-five out of every one hundred members of the churches and congregations came from farm houses. In the churches of hamlets, little centers of from 50 to 150 population with only one church, seventy-five out of a hundred are farmers. Fifty per cent, or one half of the members and congregations of churches of villages, of from 200 to 1,000 population are farmers. And even in small cities with 1,200 to 7,000 population the churches have 10 to 15 per cent of their members farmers.

The great number of farmers in these churches are making necessary the training and selection of a new kind of minister. For until now the "farmer" was seldom spoken in theological seminaries.

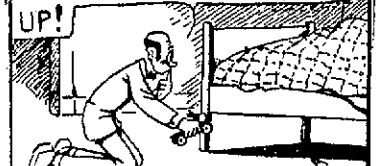

All preachers are prepared for city churches and educated to the needs of city people. Recently, however, leaders in all the great religious bodies have recognized the necessity of training men for rural parishes who see the possibilities of developing country parishes.

"In this new religious education ministers are making more and more use of the college culture maintained in many of the states."

LESS THAN HALF AUTOS
IN PARIS SINCE THE WAR
YET ACCIDENTS INCREASE

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Paris, July 14.—There are less than half as many motor vehicles circulating in Paris as before the war, but there are more street accidents. The pedestrian was more secure during the first few months, before the lack of skill of new conductors, replacing the old men, began to show, and before they acquired the reckless speed habit. The taxi drivers claim that the military chauffeurs are the cause of the trouble. The statistics of prosecutions for violation of the regulations indicate that the taxi is the principal culprit. Of 705 cases of violations prosecuted in May, 524 were against taxi-auto drivers. There were 243 prosecutions for excessive speed.

PRESIDENT WILSON
ALWAYS CLOSELY GUARDED

Windsor, Vt., July 15.—Few persons realize today, not even the natives of this section, how carefully the President was guarded on his recent visit here. It was officially denied that any extra or unusual precautions were taken. The third time the President has occupied "Harlakenden House" as a summer residence. But there was a young army of secret service men on guard day and night.

"S. S."—as the secret service is known—headquarters were maintained in a room in the village postoffice in this city. Private telephones connected the President's home and the secret service operatives also had a private phone system. They worked in shifts, taking turns patrolling the grounds of the Harlakenden estate during the night.

"Joe" Murphy, chief of the White House squad, was in charge of the Presidential bodyguard here. Extra operatives, in addition to the regular White House force, were brought from Boston and New York.

Chief Flynn, head of the secret service, personally supervised measures taken for protection of the president. He came here several days in advance when the president's train pulled in. In addition to the known dozen "S. S." men, it is understood there were others here unknown to some possibly even to the regular staff.

The secret service men had special automobiles to follow the president on all his drives through the surrounding mountain country. "Joe" Murphy sat in the president's own car and another loaded with operatives trailed closely that containing the chief executive. On the country drives, no automobile or team was allowed to pass the president from behind. This rule, while well known in Washington, was quickly learned by persons driving vehicles in this section.

NORWEGIAN GOVERNMENT TO HAVE PAID CONSULS IN TWO MORE U. S. STATES

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.)

Christiania, July 15.—The Norwegian government has decided to establish salaried consuls in Chicago and San Francisco, and to increase the salaries of the Norwegian minister and the consul general in Washington and New York. The Norwegian representatives in Chicago and San Francisco are now American citizens holding only honorary posts. The decision to put these posts on a salary basis also includes the plan of sending representatives direct from Norway to take charge. It is reported that E. J. G. Gade, at present the Norwegian government's commissioner at the San Francisco Exposition, will be appointed to one or the other of the posts.

It is desired to improve the consular service particularly because, since the outbreak of the European war, the importers has been directed to the attention of Norwegian exporters and enormous American market have than ever before. Norway has lately considered herself handicapped by the fact that the other Scandinavian countries were more fully represented by consular officials in the United States.

Frenchman's Model Bow.

The evolution of the modern bow has taken place almost entirely since the violin attained its final form, and has followed more completely perhaps than the instrument itself the development of violin music and the requirements of the player. It reached its highest perfection at the hands of Francois Tourte of Paris about 1870, whose bows have served as a model for all succeeding makers.

TREMENDOUS ATTACK OF TEUTONS AGAINST RUSSIANS DESCRIBED

ADVANCE OF RUSSIANS SURE TO BRING HEAVY COUNTER-ATTACK IN CARPATHIANS.

ARTILLERY WORK CAUSE

Correspondent Gives Vivid Account of the Russian Retreat Before the Unmerciful Pounding of Big Guns.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

Headquarters of Russian Third Army, July 14.—It is seldom that the staff of any army cares to allow a newspaper correspondent to observe or write of its defeats and retreats; the field censor's motto is Nothing Passes Except Good News.

The staff of the Russian third army has broken the precedent by allowing the freedom of its lines to the British official Press representative during the whole of its heart-breaking retreat from the Carpathian slopes, back across Galicia and even across the Russian frontier. The correspondent's first story, covering a long series of daily fights and daily concentrated artillery fire, is as follows:

The advance of the Russians over the Carpathians was sure to draw a counter-stroke, and it came just where many expected it, but with tremendous force. This was because it was not so much the work of the tired Austrians, but rather the biggest effort that Germany has yet put up in her attempts to bolster her ally.

In a house standing high by a church, I found the staff of the Division. There was a hut on the top of the hill, sitting in front of it one could see for at least ten miles in either direction.

The Division was holding a front of eight miles across a low line of wooded heights, of which the most marked feature was a village with a little church tower. Against three Russian regiments were nine, mostly German, and backed by the most formidable artillery.

Positions of Army.
Beyond each of the flanks of the Division one could see at intervals black clouds of smoke; one thick stream of smoke that stretched into the sky came from some distant petroleum works. The whole right wing was being pounded with crash after crash, sometimes four black columns rising almost simultaneously at intervals along it; under each would break out little angry teeth of sparkling flame; the only thing that seemed not to be hit was the church tower which, as each cloud died down, came out simple again in the bright sunshine. The left wing was in patches of smoke that sometimes disappeared for a time.

What was happening to the center was not so clear; so after watching for some hours the shells and shrapnel bursting along the line and on the slope, we described by some winding gullies, drawing a shrapnel as we passed over a low shoulder, and soon reached the staff of the center regiment.

Under the nearer wall of a hut, little groups were working at the telephones, while a number of soldiers lay on logs around. The Colonel came forward and took me into the open pointing at the ridge some six hundred yards away. All his left hand was at grips with the enemy, and on his right his men were fighting at the close range of two hundred yards in the wood beyond the crest.

Telephones Save Day.
The telephones worked incessantly. Each of the battalion commanders reported in turn—one that his machine guns had been put out of action, another that there was a gap in his line, a third that he was holding good at full strength. The Colonel explained that his last remark was engaged. A message came that his right flank was open and was being turned. He seized the telephone and called "Two companies forward at the double," the rest of the Division directly to the rear.

There was a peculiar humanness about all these messages; in form they were just ordinary courteous conversation. The question which brought the most disquieting answers was, "How are your communications?" The Colonel on the left reported that his line was penetrated at more than one point but was holding out. The right wing telephone gave no answer and all life there was unlivable; and I heard from soldiers a report that they had seen the Austrians in the Russian trenches.

Shells and shrapnel were crashing all round us, especially in our rear, a hut that I had passed on the way down broke out in full flame. Near or down there fell four black explosions at regular distances of fifty yards. "The four packets," as one officer called it. Our cover would all have gone with a single shot, and the men crouched to avoid the falling splinters from each shell.

In this most depressing atmosphere the conversation between the Colonel and the division staff, "I can get no track of the right wing," Cavalry is reported on both of my flanks. The right had had to retire at nightfall. Three hours at least to wait.

The orders were communicated in French over each battalion telephone. The Colonel apologized for his elementary French; it was anyhow the French of a brave man.

As a disquietude increased, permission came to retire at once; but the Colonel answered that this could not be done; he was in hot defensive action, and the enemy would follow on his heels; at present he was holding his own.

My hosts argued me to go. The situation was getting too serious for a non-combatant. It was an ill-fated last I turned for the slope. As I began to reach shelter, I suddenly saw on the hills to the west men running down the slope towards us.

"Perhaps ours, perhaps the enemy," said my Cosack escort. But we were now in comparative safety; for we were out of the line of fire, and the valley to the north of us was full of our own people.

Wounded Leave Front.
Here there was a long train of wounded and we found our automobile in the midst of it. We packed in the men with the worst wounds that we noticed; they lay without a groan, and one said "Thanks to you, the Lord, and eternal gratitude to you." A young soldier told us that no living man could have driven the truck on the right wing from their positions; but that the whole area was covered with shells till trenches and men were leveled out of existence. The companies left comparatively intact had all joined the center. Of this section of the line we could only hear vague rumors.

Late in the day we reached the deserted school house to which the staff had retreated.

By morning the lines lay just outside the town, and the Germans and Austrians were making a tremendous attack on them, pounding them with the heaviest artillery and advancing in close column again and again.

The leader of this Division is a fighting general, robust and active. The staff was very close up to the front, and from the balcony of the school house the general viewed the line and gave orders. Many parts of the lines were now non-existent, having been reduced to a series of shell-pits by the German artillery.

Making my way to the advanced lines, I found a Brigadier General, and got leave to accompany an attack. It was the first of the famous Caucasian Corps just arrived after an all night march, and going up to the attack. A battalion commander stood just below the hut, put it in his men in position. He was a quiet little man, at once ready and with an old voice, that sounded vigorously, however, across the slope. The men made their way by companies up the different clefts in the hollow and soon lined the ridge beyond. The commander moved about among them at an easy walk, directing some, hurrying on others.

The men went forward on their knees, separating off into what the Russians call a "chain," where any one with initiative, by finding cover to all the further forward, gives a lead to the rest. When the crest was reached, the commander went forward in different directions.

On his return he gave a few orders to his officers; one of them was a little excited, and said, "I have an instinct that it will be right; God grant that it is a true one," and turning to his men he shouted "God is with us." Except for this, nothing broke the atmosphere of the evening stillness.

"Well children," said the commander, "What shall I say to you? With God! Forward!"

Officers Brave Death.
One company went off to the wood on the right, and after a few minutes another with the commander and myself moved forward over the bare hill, leaving two others to follow in reserve. The men advanced in little groups creeping in line with each other; the officers walked about freely, often in advance of the men, or encouraging any that showed too much caution. The commander and I branched off into the edge of the wood; he turned and smiled to me as the shrapnel tore away some of the boughs. At the bottom the machine guns were hurried up, and we ascended the further slope.

We were now on a bare height which was lit by a tongue projecting forward, and a hot musketry fire was opened on us. A man near me called out that he was wounded and rolled himself down to the hollow where a bearer set about bandaging him; a shell burst beyond us and another called out. One could see what happened to the men nearest to one.

The commander continued to stroll about among the men, in the same way as he would have done out of action; several of the men begged him to lie down. We went round the height and he brought his men everywhere to the edge of it and told them to entrench themselves, which they set about doing at once. We could see where the bullets came from, on the low ground in front. To our left was a ridge with trees, along which we could see men on horseback coming from the direction of the enemy. To our right, beyond the wood, was a high ridge covered with men, who appeared to be advancing upon us but did not open fire. Suddenly a column of blue figures was seen coming up close on our front. In what seemed a minute, two of our machine guns had been moved to this side. Round some brush-wood thirty yards away came the first rush of the columns; one caught sight of a line of pale faces. Our commander shouted orders; a young officer clenched his fist; our gunners brought out a shower of bullets, and the Austrian column disappeared into the wooded valley.

Later in the day, after I had gone back to headquarters, I learned that the little commander had been brought back to the town wounded in the head in the last Austrian attack.

Retreat Well Formed.
In the evening I retreated with the Divisional Staff several miles to new quarters. Along the road the general stopped any straggling soldiers and asked closely what had happened to their regiments. This was all extremely well done; he was really severe only to one batch who told him an obvious lie. Altogether the retreat, for it was that, was unattended by any panic and everyone seemed anxious to help his neighbor. Going at a sharp trot, we reached our new quarters at three in the morning.

I woke at noon in a farmhouse, in a village that was filled with the Divisional field train. The Divisional General had gone off early to the front to rectify the new positions. The news that came in was uncertain and anxious. The first hut which the General and his staff had entered had been made untenable by the enemy's artillery. The second hut that he visited was also set on fire. No further news of him came till late in the evening, and he had barely escaped capture.

Word came that the General Staff must be moved further back. The field train was set in motion, and we traveled without any kind of confusion across a beautiful range of wooded hills. We stopped more than once to see the fight that was going on below us. It was a glaring line of fire and smoke, and twin yellow and white bursts of the Austrian shrapnel being almost in the white or black smoke of the German artillery. We traveled very slowly and for a good part of the day the officers and men had a feeling of great vacation at having to retire before troops which they felt themselves capable of beating with any equal conditions.

Suffer Huge Losses.
In the afternoon we drew up in a large village full of field trains. Reports came in from all quarters; nearly all the regiments had suffered great losses. The trenches had been left only when the enemy's artillery had made them untenable. In some parts the systematic ploughing up of whole given areas had gone so far behind our lines that even approach to the trenches had been made impossible.

The game was not lost even on this ground, and immediate measures had been taken for counter-attacks the following day. Meanwhile the town in which we were under an intermittent but violent bombardment of aeroplanes and all the hospitals were being moved to the rear.

The railway station was crowded with wounded, lying close together anywhere in the family manner of the Russian peasant. Most were wounded in the hands or the head, showing that they had been under devastating fire which hit anything that was at all exposed. There were beaten off, in wounds of all kinds all over the body.

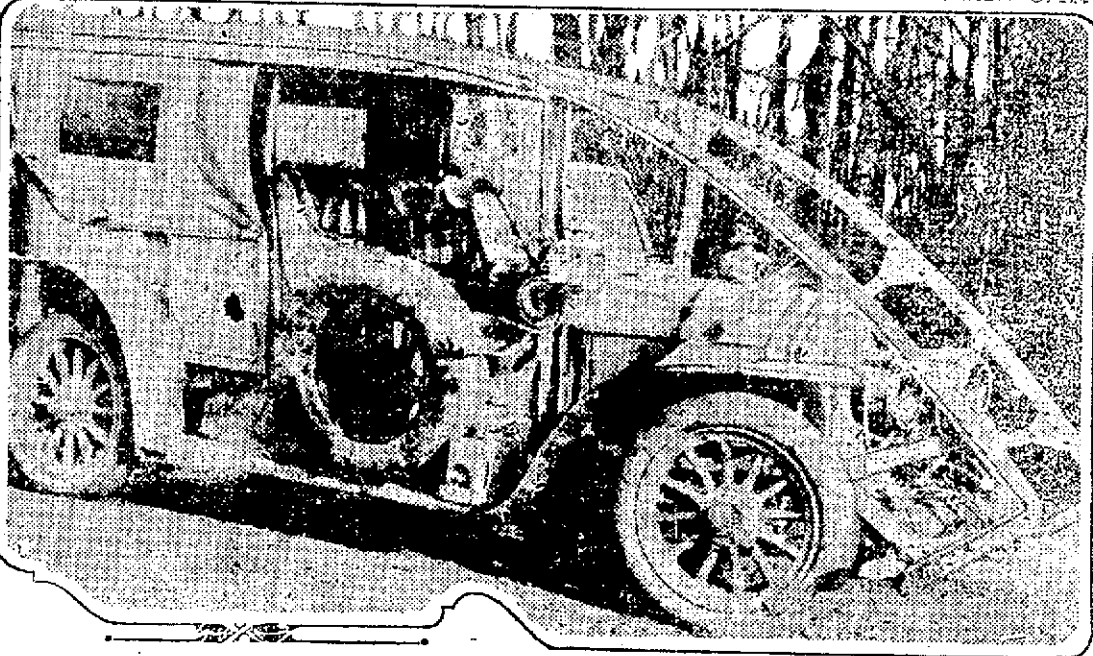

The officers lay here like the rest, separated only by the silent respect shown to them by the men. The number of wounded officers is not surprising, for, as I have explained, they stand and walk while their men are ordered to crawl, but the sacrifice in officers is particularly impressive.

SEEK NEW PLAYERS FOR THE CARDINALS

"Push" Miller Leaves Cardinals and New First Sacker and Third Baseman Is Wanted.

The line-up of the Janesville Cardinals will be given a considerable shaking for the coming game Sunday with the Monroe Pirates, and then given a double dose of shaking for the game with the Beloit Fairies at Beloit on July 24th. For the Monroe game Bob Fucik will twirl and Fucik showed stellar pitching ability in the last Sunday's game with the Beloit team. Manager George Caldwell is attempting to secure the services of a catcher named Cawkins as a battery mate for Fucik and in case this deal falls through, Hall will be assigned to the wind-up job. The Cardinals are in need of a new first sacker and need him badly. Efforts were made to land a university player of note but this was without success as the player in question leaves Madison this week. Unless a player is picked up by Saturday, Green will probably hold down the sack. Cornell is slated for second and for the Monroe team Doc or Merkle will be at short as the services of Bradigan, were too expensive to be expanded on this game. The fighting Dutchman, will, however, be on the job with the Cardinals, in the Beloit game. Rumor has it that a crack first baseman has been secured for this game along with Bradigan. The new man is reputed to be heavy with the stick and a southern leaguer.

"Push" Miller this morning gave word that Whitewater wanted his services at a bigger figure than Janesville had been offering him and he was allowed to depart, his play being not being such as to allow a Miller figure. Manager Caldwell is making haste to fill his place this week and a Bi-State league player from Illinois will undoubtedly be at the far corner for the game Sunday or at least for the week following.

"If the support from the fans continues at the present pace," said Manager Caldwell, "new high-class players will be secured including Bradigan that will make a winning team for all corners. A prize was secured in Fucik for when right he is unbeatable."

The Monroe Pirates have a Bi-State player pitching and the Green county champion has gone through a very successful season. Their line-up will be bolstered considerably in an attempt to beat the Cardinals when the Pirates lay claim to the title of Southern Wisconsin, having downed Beloit in one contest.

SOX TROUNCE MACKMEN IN POOR GAME 5 TO 4

Chicago, July 15.—The Chicago White Sox increased their lead yesterday when they took the second straight game from the Philadelphia Athletics by the count of 5 to 4. It began and ended as a ball game should, but in the middle section it was a rain soaked exhibition that nearly ended the contest with the score tied two and two in the second inning.

The Mackmen began stalling when showers halted the pastime in the third and made the game a joke. Bush, who was pitching, began to walk the batters, and Faber was hit by a pitch ball. On reaching first base the Sox pitcher kept going and the Athletics refused to put him out. Three stolen bases. Weaver threw a ball at Bush when the Mack pitcher tried to "bump" him to delay matters, causing a fuss in which the Athletics stalled for considerable time.

Cubs Break Even. New York, July 15.—Rather than be skinned alive seven times in a row the Cubs, with Larry Cheney on the slab, steamed up and beat the Giants in their second game yesterday by the score of 3 to 1. Vaughn, in the first game, was easy meat for the McGraw tribe, they winning by the score of 6 to 5. Adams relieved Vaughn, and until the eighth was the whole works for the Cubs. In the eighth, however, he passed one and Fletcher sparked a home run that meant defeat for the Bruins.

Cheney was in good shape, due to the hot weather, and the Giants got but three safe blows off him. Jeff Teerest, who pitched the first game, attempted to come back in the second and lasted only a few innings.

TOURNAMENT SHOOT FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Clubs From Janesville, Rockford, Beloit and Capron to Compete at Traps Here Tomorrow.

Friday, between twelve-thirty and four o'clock, weather permitting, there will be over four thousand clay targets shot between trap teams representing gun clubs from Janesville, Beloit, Capron and Rockford. The tournament will be held at the Janesville Gun club grounds, at North Washington street, and is scheduled to start at twelve-thirty o'clock.

The teams from each city will be divided into two five men teams, making forty shooters entered in the five twenty bird events. Each tournament contestant will shoot at one hundred targets from the two traps with which the Janesville club grounds is equipped. A number of professional shots are expected, but the gunners are not entered in the competition. The public is cordially invited to attend the tourney, no admission being charged. At the last shoot held here between the league there was a large gallery present, and trap shooting is increasing by leaps and bounds as a popular sport in this city.

Manager Mack of the Athletics says that the peculiar slow infield on the White Sox play enables Roth, the Milwaukee recruit, to play great ball at third base at home, but that he is helpless on a fast diamond. This accounts for Rowland's continual switching of fielders. While on the road Roth plays in the outfield, but returns to third base when the team is at home.

Sport Snap Shots MORRIS MILLER

A baseball sharp asks: "Why can't a man who has already reached second go back to first if his presence on first is of more value than on second?" There are several questions along this line which could be asked. For instance, why can't a man who has made a home run run back the other way for two if that would be of more value to his team?

Pittsburgh is said to be anxious to get George Twombly, the Greater Boston boy with Cincinnati, but Herzog cannot see his way clear to letting the outfielder get away from him. He is too valuable a man to use in a pinch, and the Reds would be lost without him in case of accident to any of the other outfielders.

Branch Rickey is gathering in as much college talent as John McGraw. He has rounded up Elmer, the pitching star of Michigan; Koob, Kalamazoo normal; Bowman, a twirler from the University of Alabama; Schmandy, a first baseman from St. Louis University, not to mention Burton, an outfielder from Benton Harbor high school.

The Braves still profess to think that they will go on another spurt, such as won them the world championship last season, but they are not so cheery as they were at the beginning of the season. The continued wallpings they have been getting is beginning to tell on their confidence.

President Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox says that when he built the new White Sox park he did not think any one would ever hit the ball over the left field fence, a feat that Bunny Brief recently performed. He says he does not believe that any one in the business hits harder than Brief, and that he looks for him to prove one of the team's most valuable batsmen.

The marvelous pitching of Alexander and Meyer, the two pitchers who have kept the Phillies in the pennant fight in the National league, brings forcibly to mind the many small things upon which success in baseball hinges. This is especially true in the case of Alexander. Not only was this phenomenal twirler, probably the best in the game today, picked up by draft, and considered only a second-rater at the start, but he would have been actually sent back to the minor leagues but for two men. One of these is Pat Moran, the present manager of the Phillies, and the other Earl Moore, the Cleveland pitcher who has now drifted into oblivion from the Federal league.

Red Doolin, then manager of the Phillies, despaired of getting results with Alexander and preferred Chalmers as a pitcher. Moran, who was the pitching coach, liked Alexander's style and his personality, but agreed that he did not know how to get the results, though he persuaded Doolin to keep him until he could go over him thoroughly. At this juncture Moore, who when going right was the greatest side-arm pitcher in the game, stepped into the breach and offered to teach Alex his style of pitching. Alex took to the side-arm style of hurling like a duck to water, and this has been his pitching method ever since.

Hughie Jennings wants Wally Schang on his Detroit club. The Mack ax that is hanging over the heads of several of the veterans on the Athletics has got Jennings started on the idea of getting Schang. It is not likely, however, that Hughie will get what he wants, for it is not thought Mack will let Schang go. Connie thinks Wally will be the man to fill the third base gap.

Too Many. It was W. S. Gilbert who once remarked: "It is easy enough for bishops to be good on a salary of five thousand pounds a year, but we have to be good for nothing"—a pause—"and some of us are."

One of the saddest phases of all human experience is the way a man, just about the time he succeeds in getting his brain developed to the point where he might accomplish something with it, finds that he has to devote all his attention to his teeth, stomach and legs to keep going at all.—Ohio State Journal.

DICK TO TRY FOR U. S. SENATE AGAIN

Former Senator Dick will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator in Ohio. It is thought likely this development will necessitate Burton's taking a decided stand either as a candidate for the presidential nomination or for the senate.

The Irony of Life. One of the saddest phases of all human experience is the way a man, just about the time he succeeds in getting his brain developed to the point where he might accomplish something with it, finds that he has to devote all his attention to his teeth, stomach and legs to keep going at all.—Ohio State Journal.

SOME men have tried so long to find tobacco that would satisfy them, that they are naturally a little skeptical when they first hear of the Real Tobacco Chew.

But once they get the good tobacco taste they want to help other men. That's why they tell one another about it.

A little chew of pure, rich, mellow tobacco—seasoned and sweetened just enough—cuts out so much of the grinding and spitting.

THE REAL TOBACCO CHEW IS NOW CUT TWO WAYS!! W-B CUT IS LONG SWEET. RIGHT-CUT IS SHORT SWEET.

Take less than one-quarter the old size chew. It will be more satisfying than a mouthful of ordinary tobacco. Just take a nibble of it until you find the strength chew that suits you, then see how easily and evenly the real tobacco taste comes, how it satisfies, how much less you have to spit, how few chews you take to be tobacco satisfied. That's why it is the Real Tobacco Chew. That's why it costs less in the end. The taste of pure, rich tobacco does not need to be covered up. An excess of licorice and sweetening makes you spit too much.

One small chew takes the place of two big chews of the old kind.

(Notice how the salt brings out the rich tobacco taste.)

The May Pole

THIS is the May-time of the year
The time that girls and boys hold
As round the Pole you ribbons
Bring out the Pole with ribbons gay
And we can dance the time away.
Now under one, now over go,
Tripping lightly—heel and toe.
The ribbons gay float in the air,
The children skip now here—now
there.
Around the Pole—out on the lawn,
Come join the dance, the fun is on.

Such fun you hardly ever find
As round the Pole you ribbons
wind.
Now in, now out, keep going 'round,
So fast you scarcely touch the ground,
Pull tight, pull hard, now dance again,
And wind your fancy-ribboned chain.
The Pole with ribbons tightly wound
Is such a sight—hard to be found.
A pretty thing to meet your glance
Come then and join the May Pole dance

A Grant Anecdote

U. S. GRANT.
Born April 27, 1822; Died July 20, 1885.

GENERAL GRANT was a lover of horses. The following anecdote is told about him and the way he felt toward a bad-tempered driver who mistreated a tired horse.

One day, during the Civil War, an army was marching along the country roads in Virginia. The men in their stained blue-coats looked tired and cold. Behind the marching soldiers came a number of wagons that carried the provisions.

The horses that drew the heavy wagons looked as tired and foot-sore as the men. Nearly all of the drivers were very kind to the poor animals. They kept a sharp eye on the road to see which side was the better, and in every way tried to make things as easy as possible for the horses.

On one of the wagons, however, there was a cross and tired driver, who not only scolded his horse, but often used the whip. Finally he came to a marshy place and it seemed impossible for the horse to budge the wagon. The man became so angry that he raised the whip and brutally struck the horse, using bad language all the while.

He was in such an excited state that he didn't see General Grant as he came riding up on his fine black horse. Grant was horrified and called out:

"You scoundrel! Stop beating that poor horse!"

Naturally the whip fell out of the man's hand, and he was scared to death to be caught by his superior officer, but he never said a word, eager to see what the General would do.

"You Scoundrel, Stop Beating That Poor Horse!"

The General gave a signal to one of his officers, who rode forward and saluted.

"Send another man to drive this wagon," he ordered, "and have this fellow tied up to a tree for six hours as a punishment for his cowardly action to a horse."

TRY IT.

SOME-MADE toys are lots more fun than bought ones. First you have the pleasure of making the toy, then you enjoy playing with it. You all know how to cut dolls out of paper. Would you like to see these dolls dance? A pane of glass, about 10 by 12 inches, will do the work. Support this glass on two books about 1 and 1-4 inches from the table, placing these books as far apart as the glass will allow.

Now place your tissue-paper dolls on the table under the glass. With a linen handkerchief rub the glass briskly, rubbing in a circular direction, until the friction causes the paper figures to dance, hop, turn and tumble.

Old Knapsack's Plea for Peace

LITTLE Bobbie was "playing Soldiers" in the nursery. He divided his men and cannon into two forces, one of which he named the Allies and the other the Germans. Then a fierce battle ensued, with Master Bobbie as the commander-in-chief of both armies.

Of course, in real warfare such a procedure would have been impossible. But Bobbie, you see, had a way of being commander-in-chief to two armies fighting each other without being unfair to either of them.

Really, his plan was quite simple. He stood the Allies in rows on the floor at one end of the nursery, and the Germans at the other. Each side had a cannon—terrible, dreadful implements of war, despite the fact that all they could shoot was a marble forced out of their gaping mouths by a spring suddenly released.

It much better had they been real cannons with real smoke and real bullets.

But, lacking these, he set the spring on the cannon in the Germans' camp, dropped the white marble into the barrel of the gun, knelt down and took careful aim at the forces of the Allies standing so valiantly in rows at the other end of the room.

Then at the other end of the room, and he released the spring and cried out: "Bang! Bang!" Straight down the floor the deadly marble sped and moved down a whole row of brave wooden soldiers.

Bobbie waited until the "smoke of battle" had cleared away and then marched over to the camp of the Allies, to be their commander-in-chief for a while.

Of course, he set the spring on their cannon and dropped the same white marble into its barrel. Kneeling down, he took careful aim at his former comrades in arms and released the spring, crying out: "Bang! Bang!" with just as much fervor as he had before. A whole row of wooden Germans bit the dust.

Just then he espied the morning paper with its interesting photographs of battle scenes in the cruel war now being waged in Europe. So he placed his little stool between what was left of the two armies, and sat down upon it with the paper opened out before him.

Goodness, how tired he was! The pictures were certainly thrilling—but why couldn't he hold his eyes open—instead of blinking and blinking—and—

"Attention!" cried a curt voice suddenly.

Bobbie looked around and to his amazement discovered a tiny soldier peering out at him from the center of the open newspaper.

"Attention!" cried the small authoritative voice again. And its owner hopped lightly to the floor and stood, stiff as a ramrod, and saluted. "I am called Old Knapsack," he said. "I believe I have the honor of addressing the commander-in-chief of these two hostile armies."

Bobbie tried to click his own heels together, return the salute and reply in the affirmative; but, somehow, he couldn't so much as crook his little finger.

"Yes, they call me Old Knapsack," the queer little soldier continued. His uniform was covered with dust and his gold lace was sadly tarnished, but he was as erect and alert as any soldier could hope to be.

"So you've been playing at war, have you, my young friend," he said, with a sad shake of his head.

Bobbie, still staring at him, nodded. The old, white-haired man with the queer floppy hat was unlike any man he had ever seen.

"I've been in a war," said the old man. "Civil War."

"What was that?" asked Bobbie.

"Why," said Old Knapsack, smiling, "that was the time when the soldiers of the North and South fought."

Sitting down by the door-way, Old Knapsack began a story.

"I remember," he said, "a certain night during the last year of the war. We had been fighting all day and we had beaten the enemy. A bright moon was shining as I walked over the battle-field and by its light I saw a man in the enemy's uniform, lying on the ground."

"I gave him a drink of water. He had been shot through the chest and was dying, but he was still able to speak—though his voice was very low."

"Will you do me one favor?" he asked, as I bent over him.

"I said that I would. He pulled a little package from his pocket and handed it to me."

"Go to that address," he said, and told me that I died in battle."

"It was months and months before I finally reached the dead man's home. The little house was badly out of repair just as most of the houses of the South were in those days."

"A beautiful old lady met me at the door. She was the dead soldier's mamma. When I told her that her son had died on the battle field she cried and cried as if her heart would break. I tried to comfort her."

"And while she was crying a little boy ran into the room. The old woman stopped crying and shook her head at me so that I wouldn't say anything until the little fellow had left the room. 'Who is he?' I asked her."

"He—he—" she replied through her tears, 'is my little grandson.'

Bobbie looked up at Old Knapsack quickly. "Then the poor little boy hadn't any father any longer, had he?"

"No," Old Knapsack answered and shook his head sadly. "No, he had no father. You see, Bobbie, it is not all glory and cheers and waving flags and bands in warfare. War is cruel, war is terrible; and war not only hurts those who fall on the battle-field, but also those who are left behind."

Right now, over in Germany, Belgium, France, Russia and Austria-Hungary men are dying by the tens of thousands and they are buried where they fall or—more horrible to relate—not buried at all.

"And for each brave soldier who dies there is someone back home who mourns for him. A father, a mother, a wife, a child or—well, each dead man has some relative or good friend whose heart is saddened by the news of his death. War, Bobbie, is not the beautiful, glorious thing you may imagine it to be when you read about its heroes or play with your own toy soldiers on the floor. War—"

There came a rustling and—presto! Old Knapsack sat up and rubbed his eyes. He found himself sitting on the floor. He looked around him. There beside him lay the newspaper where it had fallen when he, too, had slipped down from the stool. And there, too, lay the "dead and wounded" of his wooden soldiers. He knew, of course, that it had all been but a dream and that no such person as Old Knapsack existed. And yet—and yet—

He picked up one of the "dead" soldiers and stood him on his feet again.

"Gee!" he said softly, "I'm glad you aren't a real soldier, for you might have a little boy left behind and—"

With the paper opened out before him.

May-Day Customs in England

WITH the coming of the month of May, Spring is indeed at hand; and mankind, as well as all Nature, wakes up from the long Winter sleep and hails with joy the beginning of the season of flowers and sunbeams.

Over in England—at least in times esquely dressed. So long as the procession is moving the grotesque figure conceals himself in the draperies; but when it comes to a halt, he steps forth and enacts a pantomime with another sweep who is standing on the street and is usually dressed as a burlesque actress in a gown elaborately be-spangled.

Not infrequently several of the little sweeps will dress up as girls, cover themselves with brick dust and put large gilt crowns on their heads. They also carry their shovels and brushes and even drums and fife and raise a great racket to which the other sweeps try to dance, in a boisterous fashion.

In a few of the quaint English villages the old custom of dancing around a May-pole is still in vogue; and the children are the principal dancers. For a long time beforehand the children have hunted the nooks and crannies in the woods where wild-flowers bloom. And early on the first of May they go out in bands and gather them—violets and primroses and other sweet blossoms.

It is interesting to note that the flower called the primrose in England is different from the one we call by that name, for it is of a rich yellow color and not unlike the buttercup.

But to return to the English children and their celebration. Loaded down with the flowers and watched by their admiring elders, they come to the old, weather-stained May-pole and decorate it with the blossoms and dance around it.

Long streamers and garlands are fashioned of the blossoms and one end of each streamer is attached high up on the pole and the other is held by one of the children; then, as they dance round and round, the streamers move with them and become intertwined, thus forming a most pleasing picture in the warm May sunshine. And all about them, too, are the Hawthorn trees in bloom.

There is another English May-day custom in which the child also figures. This is held high up in the tower at Magdalen college, Oxford, when boy choristers, in their vestments, meet there at five o'clock in the morning and sing matins while the great bells peal a welcome to May.

A short distance from Oxford it is the custom for the children to carry garlands of flowers from door to door. They also fashion a beautiful floral crown of great size which is carried in procession by four children who are followed by a "lord" and a "lady" (a boy and a girl respectively) nicely dressed, with their wrists bound together by a white handkerchief.

In another part of the British Empire, Canada, a Queen of the May is chosen, and a celebration is held around a huge May-pole. By popular ballot a ruler is chosen, robed and crowned. Then, all make obeisance to her. The crown she wears and the sceptre she bears are both cunningly fashioned of the Spring's choicest blossoms.

Looking back into the past, record has been found of a number of queer English May-day customs. For instance, at one time the fair milkmaids of London, early in the morning, used to deck themselves in flowers and fantastic costume and lead their cows, also garlanded with blossoms, through the streets. And they danced around the animals and, all together, had a very merry time.

Another queer custom was that of having a man dance with a most peculiar adornment. The upper half of his body was covered by a large frame which was concealed in blankets of flowers. Attached to the frame-work were a number of flags, or silver drinking cups. Only his legs were visible and, as you can well imagine, he presented a most fantastic appearance.

Pretty Stories of Spring Flowers

ONCE upon a time an old man was travelling along a mountain side. He was leaning on his staff; his back was bent and his limbs were weak and weary.

"What is this?" he cried as his eyes caught sight of a tiny blue flower almost under his foot. "Such loveliness in this rugged place, and he stooped to pick it from its stem."

"Wait a moment," sighed the wind. "Look beyond, and you will see things really worthy while."

The old man raised his head, and lo, two huge rocks separated and hovered unseen in a tree, resolved to be revenged.

It was Apollo's turn next, and as he raised the quail, Zephyr caused a breeze to spring up and the quail flew skyward instead of down, striking Hyacinth on the temple, causing his death.

"My Hyacinth," cried Apollo, heart-broken at the death of his young friend. And to commemorate him he produced a lovely, fragrant flower he called Hyacinth and which still blooms every spring as the sun's rays become warm and the gentle zephyrs blow.

On the banks of the Tweed, so the story runs, there dwelt a proud chieftain who had a lovely daughter whom he kept prisoner in a lonely and secluded part of his castle because she had fallen in love with the handsome son of his greatest enemy. She was not permitted to leave her chamber or see any one except a faithful attendant who felt sorry for her young mistress.

One day the lover induced this attendant to hide a ladder made of silken rope under her apron.

"Give this to your mistress," he said, "with it she can escape from her prison."

At the appointed hour the lover waited at the foot of the high wall behind which the maiden's prison was built. He saw her fasten the silken ladder to the casement and commence her perilous descent. In her great hurry to reach the ground she missed her footing, and fell—to be dashed to pieces on the wall below.

On the spot where her body lay lifeless, close to the wall, a flower sprang up, the blossoms of which were just like the dark brown velvet in which the hapless maid had been dressed. And thus her sad fate is recalled by the Wall Flower.

Apollo loved many maidens, and occasionally he became very fond of good-looking youths. One in particular, Hyacinth by name, was loved by this great god.

Zephyr, also, was fond of Hyacinth. He was the god of the west wind, and he was bitterly jealous of the favor Hyacinth showed toward the sun god.

One day Apollo invited Hyacinth to play quills with him in the garden of the gods. Oh, yes, the gods were sports, and played all sorts of games. Hyacinth was scoring, and Apollo seemed pleased, while Zephyr, who there loomed before him a cavern. He entered, and beheld the most wonderful jewels, and masses of gold and silver.

"My luck has turned," he said. "With these I can do great things."

He filled his knapsack with this new-found wealth, and was about to retrace his steps to his humble home, when the two huge rocks closed again, catching the knapsack that the old man had fastened on his back, inside the cave.

There he stood, as poor as before, but he was grateful, "for," he mumbled, "a little more and I would have been shut in, too. I'll go home and stay there."

"Forget-me-not," cried a little voice from under his foot, and the tiny blue flower stretched up its head in pleading.

He took the blossom home to his wife who, after hearing the story of the lost jewels, kissed the flower tenderly and said: "We still have our little 'Forget-me-not' to cheer us."

To this day, the lovely small blue flower is called Forget-me-not.

The Greeks had many gods. One of the most important ones was Apollo, the god of the sun, and his name was Apollo.

Apollo loved many maidens, and occasionally he became very fond of good-looking youths. One in particular, Hyacinth by name, was loved by this great god.

The Circus'll Soon Be Here

URRAH! and hurrah! I'm as glad as can be—

It's the dandiest time of the year.

My pennies I'll have to save up carefully, For the circus'll soon be here.

Just think of the acrobats swinging on high Whom the people will gaze at with fear! And the clowns—Gee! I'm sure that I'll laugh till I cry When the circus is really here.

The freaks and the side-shows I'll visit of course, For they're said to be terribly queer. There's a lady all spangly who rides on a horse In the circus that's coming here.

Oh, say! I'm so thrilled that I jump up and down— For the moment is drawing quite near: Soon the snowy white tents will be pitched in the town, And the circus'll really be here!

Storks in Holland.

Nowhere else in the world does the stork stand in higher regard than among the people of western Holland. Nothing is regarded as more indicative of good fortune to come than for a pair of storks to build their nest in the chimney of a humble cottage. However humble that cottage may be, the occupants feel that the storks' nest promises many blessings in the future. The farmers erect long poles with a box at the top in their fields, feeling that if the birds build their nests there both the quality and the quantity of their crops are assured.

False Logic.

"Women are all alike," declared the disappointed author bitterly. "Oh, I don't know," responded the maiden airily. "You must not draw general conclusions from the fact that all the women you have known managed to get on to your curves."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Good Guess.

Redd—Been out in your new automobile? Greene—Yes. Had trouble going out. We stopped several times, but coming back we didn't make a stop.

"I see; you were towed home."—Yonkers Statesman.

Knew Him.

"Well, how about that little girl?" "But I told you to call at 4 o'clock, and it is only 3 now." "I know it; I wanted to catch you in."—Houston Post.

Hopeless Case.

"Pessimistic, is he?" "To the ultimate limit. He couldn't even imagine a castle in the air without a mortgage on it."—Judge.
